Give the O'Hare arrival its own flight, passenger contact and Kenosha destination record. A Kenosha host is helping a visiting traveler. Contact Limo LLC provides airport transportation between Kenosha and O'Hare. Use these details to discuss the actual journey and keep any point still needing confirmation visible.

Separate host knowledge from traveler knowledge

Ask the guest for the actual flight and luggage details, and ask the host to confirm the Kenosha address and entrance. These are different parts of the request. Give the guest the transportation contact and agreed practical instructions so the visitor can ask a question without depending entirely on the host being available. Confirm the guest's intended first destination before using a host's address in the brief. If plans change, keep the traveler, host and transportation discussion aligned around the same updated information.

Use the final arriving flight

Identify the flight that lands at O'Hare, including the airline, flight number and arrival date. If the journey includes a connection, keep the earlier flight separate. The aircraft leaving your original city may not be the one arriving in Chicago. Copy the current itinerary rather than rebuilding it from memory or a calendar title.

Read the date carefully when traveling overnight. The day you start traveling and the day you land can differ. Write the arrival date beside Contact Limo LLC the O'Hare flight and review it with the person organizing transportation. If the airline revises that leg, share the revised details instead of sending only a message that the trip has changed.

Explain what happens after landing

Tell the transportation provider whether you expect to collect checked luggage and whether other members of your group are arriving separately. These details help frame the pickup discussion without creating a fixed promise about how quickly you will be ready. Keep the meeting instructions specific to your reservation and confirm them before relying on them.

Ask how to communicate once you are ready and where the agreed passenger meeting point will be. Do not substitute a remembered location from a previous trip. If you are unsure of your location after landing, describe the information you can see and ask for clarification rather than walking toward an assumed pickup area.

Confirm the Kenosha destination

Provide the full destination address, even if it is the same address used for the outbound ride. Check the building entrance and any access details relevant to the arriving passengers. If the destination is a hotel, distinguish the hotel name from a nearby property with a similar name and confirm that it is the place where the group intends to finish.

List any requested stop as a separate itinerary question. A simple return transfer and a journey with additional destinations need different descriptions. Discuss the complete route before booking rather than letting the last traveler explain a new destination after the group has reached the vehicle.

Keep the communication plan available

Choose a lead traveler whose phone will be usable after arrival. Save the reservation information somewhere the traveler can retrieve without the organizer being present. Include another group member in the practical plan if the booking contact will not be on the flight.

For a delayed flight, contact the team to discuss arrangements and a pickup adjustment. The published approach is to work with clients when flight plans change. Keep the conversation tied to the revised flight and the group's readiness, then confirm the updated arrangements for the ride back to Kenosha.
