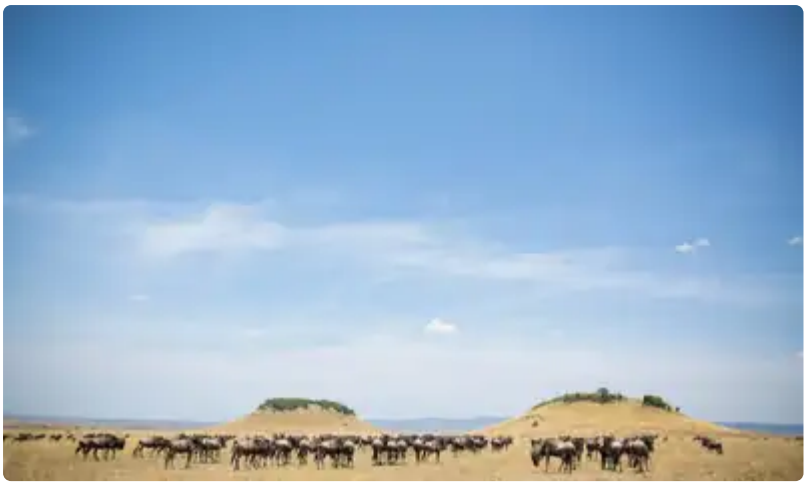
Family safaris in the Mara work well when the schedule matches the child. Game drives are long, hot and bumpy, so shorter morning drives with a pool afternoon beat a full day out.

Many camps set minimum ages for walking safaris and balloon flights, often six or seven, and some small tented camps do not accept young children at all. Confirm before booking.



Malaria precautions, car seats and long road transfers are the practical concerns. Flying in reduces road fatigue https://masaimarasafaripackages.net/flying-safari/ considerably. A private vehicle is worth the cost for families, since you control the pace and toilet stops. Family friendly options are at %LINK%.
