

Many high-rise apartment buildings across the region require a certificate of insurance before allowing a moving crew inside. Understanding this requirement ahead of time prevents last-minute delays. DMV movers experienced with high-rise buildings handle this paperwork as a routine part of the process, and Bulldog Movers in Rockville MD explains how it works.

What a COI Requirement Means for a DMV Moving Company

A certificate of insurance, often called a COI, verifies that a DMV moving company carries liability and workers' compensation coverage that meets a building's minimum requirements. Property management typically requests this document days before a scheduled move-in or move-out date.

How DMV Movers Handle COI Requests

DMV movers familiar with high-rise requirements keep updated insurance documentation on file so a COI can be issued quickly once a building's specific requirements are known. Some buildings request the property management company or building owner be named as an additional insured party on the certificate.

- COI verifies liability and workers' compensation coverage
- Buildings often require the document several days in advance
- Some buildings request additional insured language on the certificate
- Coverage minimums vary by building and property management company
- Missing COI paperwork can delay or cancel a scheduled move-in

Avoiding Delays with Movers in DMV

Movers in DMV high-rise buildings recommend contacting property management as early as possible to learn the specific COI requirements for a building. Confirming these details well before moving day avoids the risk DMV movers of a delayed or rescheduled move due to missing paperwork.

Bulldog Movers Services for High-Rise Buildings

Bulldog Movers offers local moving for residents Visit this link in high-rise buildings throughout the region, along with commercial moving for businesses in office towers with similar insurance requirements.

Understanding COI requirements ahead of time keeps a high-rise move on schedule. Bulldog Movers DMV manages this paperwork as a standard part of every high-rise relocation. Visit Bulldog Movers to confirm COI requirements for an upcoming move.