

You have waited calmly. And now the response deadline has passed, and a number of guests have still not answered.

Chasing with guests who have not RSVP'd is one of the uncomfortable parts of party planning. Yet it is necessary to guarantee you have accurate numbers for your event.

At Kollysphere, we have formulated 10 successful methods to pursue with guests who have not responded.

First. Dispatch a Gentle Nudge

Fire off a warm reminder via email or messaging service. Ensure the tone casual and non-pressuring.

Second. Make a Personal Phone Call

A direct phone call is often more effective than digital correspondence.

Third. Send a Text Message

A <https://kollysphere.com/birthday-party-planner/> quick text is typically the quickest method to get a reply.

Fourth. Use Social Media

If you are joined with the guest on social media, a polite DM can be productive.

Fifth. Ask a Mutual Friend

Should you share a shared friend with the guest, request them to courteously remind the guest on your behalf.

6. Dispatch a Follow-Up Nudge

If the initial nudge is ignored, send a second one after a brief interval.

7. Set a Final Deadline

The team at Kollysphere recommend setting a last cut-off and imparting it clearly to all guests.

Eighth. Offer an Easy Way to Respond

Cause it as easy as possible for guests to reply. Offer a direct link to an digital form.

9. Be Understanding

Keep in mind that guests might have valid justifications for not answering promptly.

10. Plan for Non-Responders

Eventually, you need to establish a last cut-off and organise based on the responses you have obtained.
