It usually happens on a warm spring afternoon after rain. You walk into a sunroom or basement and find dozens of small, dark insects with long translucent wings crawling on the window, or a scattering of wings on the sill. For many Roanoke homeowners, this is the first sign of termites, and it is natural to feel a jolt of panic. The good news is that a calm, methodical response makes a real difference, and Perdue Exterminators has walked plenty of local families through it.

First, confirm what you are seeing. Termite swarmers have straight antennae, a thick waist and two pairs of wings of equal length. Flying ants have elbowed antennae, a pinched waist and front wings longer than the back pair. Collect a few insects in a sealed bag or jar, or take a close up photo. Perdue offers Check out here insect identification, so a technician can tell you quickly which one you have.

Second, do not reach for a can of bug spray. Killing the swarmers does nothing to the colony, which is underground or inside the structure. It can also make it harder for an inspector to find the source. Vacuum up the insects if you need to, but leave mud tubes and damaged wood untouched so they can be examined.

Why Swarmers Indoors Matter

Swarmers emerging inside the house generally mean a mature eastern subterranean termite colony is active nearby, often feeding in the structure itself. In the Roanoke Valley, humid soil and damp crawl spaces make this a common situation, particularly in older homes with wood touching soil. Termites multiply rapidly, so acting promptly limits the damage they can do to joists, sill plates and subflooring.

Third, schedule a professional inspection. Perdue's licensed exterminators inspect the home's environment and construction to identify where termites are entering and what is attracting them, then recommend a course of action aimed at stopping the problem at the source. Estimates for termite work are free, and termite elimination comes with renewable annual warranties to keep protection in place in future seasons.

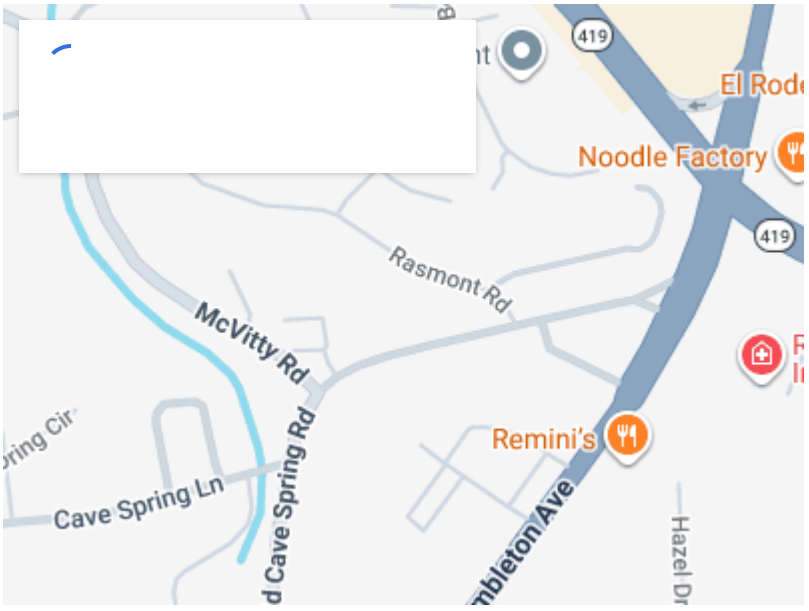

Finally, look at moisture around the house. Clean gutters, extend downspouts away from the foundation, fix leaks and pull mulch and firewood away from siding. These steps will not eliminate an active colony, but they reduce the conditions that attract termites in the first place.
