Blisters, puddles and splits. Those are the three words that sum up most of the flat roof problems in Cardiff, and you'll find all of them on garages in Llanishen and Cyncoed and on rear extensions behind the terraces of Splott, Adamsdown and Grangetown. Redland Roofing Cardiff is a family-owned roofing contractor run by John Owen, and flat roof repair and flat roof replacement are among the jobs customers mention most in the firm's Google reviews. Felt flat roofs fail in fairly predictable ways. Blisters are raised bubbles in the surface where air or moisture has become trapped between the layers, and each hot day makes them swell a little more until the felt stretches and cracks. Ponding is water that sits in puddles long after the rain has stopped, usually because the deck underneath has sagged or the falls were never quite right. Standing water speeds up the wear on the surface and finds any weak spot. Splits and cracks appear as felt ages, shrinks and gets brittle, especially around the edges, the upstands against walls and the outlets where the water drains into the guttering. You might also notice damp patches on the ceiling underneath, a soft, spongy feel if you press on the deck, or moss and debris collecting in low spots. The honest question is whether a repair will do or whether the roof has reached the end of its life. A single blister or a short split on an otherwise sound roof can often be repaired. When the felt is failing in several places, the deck is soft or the roof holds water across a large area, patching tends to buy only a little time before the next leak. In those cases, replacement is usually the better value. Redland Roofing Cardiff replaces flat roofs with an EPDM rubber membrane laid over new tongue-and-groove sterling board decking, giving you a fresh, solid base and a single sheet of rubber rather than tired, patched felt. Good roofers in Cardiff will show you what they've found so you can make the call.
